Less Product, More Joy at the SIA Fall Workshop

Colleagues,

I hope the fall season has been an enjoyable and productive one so far. For SIA, the beginning of fall means that the fall workshop will be here soon. We’ll be meeting in Columbus at the Bartholomew County Public Library on October 11. “Less Product, More Joy: Practical Approaches for Reappraisal, Weeding, and Deaccessioning” promises to be a thought-provoking session. After the workshop, take advantage of the opportunity to tour the Columbus Indiana Architectural Archives facilities.

Speaking from my own experience, deciding to weed or deaccession an archival collection can be one of the most difficult decisions for an archivist. However, it’s often a necessary and worthwhile task, and can be vital to preserving the rest of the collection. If this is something you’ve struggled with as well, consider attending the workshop to learn some strategies for making responsible reappraisal decisions.

I think it’s especially exciting to have two of our own SIA members leading the workshop. Tricia Gilson is the archivist for the Columbus Indiana Architectural Archives at the Bartholomew County Public Library - and SIA’s Past President - and Jeannine Roe is the Electronic Records Archivist at the Indiana Archives and Records Administration – and a member of the SIA Communications Committee.

It’s a great opportunity to learn from each other, and also a reminder that if you are faced with a new or daunting challenge, reach out! There may be a fellow SIA member with some insight, waiting to help just a listserv away.

As always, I want to recognize all of the work that goes into planning events like the Fall Workshop. Tony Barger, Kaman Hillenburg, Rebecca Torsell, Mathew Behnke, and of course Tricia and Jeannine, have worked hard to make sure that this is a unique and productive workshop.

SIA relies on our membership to volunteer for leadership positions. If you haven’t yet, consider joining a committee. It’s a great way to get to know SIA members better, and is often a stepping stone to becoming a board member. It’s never the wrong time to get involved – send an email to SIAarchivists@gmail.com, and the Board can help you find the right fit for your time and talents.

Archivists and records managers appraise materials and select materials for collections based on policies, legal mandates, and historic precedent. Institutional priorities and collecting areas shift, laws change, and backlogs need to be addressed due to space and/or financial constraints. At times, difficult decisions must be made. When is it time to reappraise? Where is the value in weeding and deaccessioning, and how do we approach this potentially daunting (or unwanted) task?

In this workshop, instructors will examine ways to initiate and carry out conscientious and transparent collections reappraisal. They will share practical and ethical points to consider before engaging in a reappraisal and deaccessioning project or program. Participants will have the opportunity to discuss individual institutional needs and formulate situational appropriate weeding criteria. Example paper, electronic, and mixed accessions will be evaluated, with a focus on tools and procedures that can be used to improve efficiency and empower responsible decision-making throughout the reappraisal process.

For more information about this workshop and to register, visit the SIA website. Registration closes October 3.
This year’s annual pre-conference workshop Digital Preservation for Smaller Institutions: POWRR<500 was held on April 25, 2019 at the Clabber Girl Museum in Terre Haute, Indiana. Jaime Schumacher, Senior Director of Digital Collections & Scholarship at Northern Illinois University Libraries, replaced the originally scheduled instructor, Danielle Spalenka. The workshop curriculum, developed as a partnership project between NEDCC and Digital POWRR (Preserving digital Objects With Restricted Resources), specifically addressed digital preservation challenges at under-resourced organizations. Schumacher taught participants to “walk the workflow,” beginning by using the NDSA Levels of Preservation to assess institutional readiness and then guiding the group through processing a sample set of records step by step. A variety of open-source digital tools were explored, including Data Accessioner, Metadata Transformer, and Fixity, enabling attendees to experience how the applications performed file ingest, processing, and validation procedures. Response to the workshop was extremely positive, with several individuals commenting that it was the “most useful training” in electronic records received to date.

Slides and tutorials from the workshop, as well as further information about the Digital POWRR Project and POWRR’s digital preservation resources, are available here: https://digitalpowrr.niu.edu/survived-pourr-wkshp/.

Participants were also invited to a behind-the-scenes tour of the Special Collections Department of the Cunningham Memorial Library, hosted by University Archivist Katie Sutrina-Haney and Permanent Art Collection Curator Jocelyn Krueger. A range of unique ISU materials were made available to see and handle, including photographs, pottery, a sequined cheerleader’s uniform, and designs from an early 1990s school mascot competition, in which a unicorn (pictured) was one of the non-winning entries.

The tour included the Warren N. and Suzanne B. Cordell Collection of Dictionaries, one of the largest collections of its type with more than 30,000 volumes and still growing. The collection, which attracts lexicographers and scholars from around the world, holds some of the rarest and most unique dictionaries, including the world’s smallest English dictionary (the size of a postage stamp!) and a copy of the Latin grammatical treatise Ars Grammatica published in 1475.

Attendees also viewed rare books and manuscripts held in storage as well as some of the university’s sizable art collection, and discussed the challenges of providing access to materials while lacking physical gallery space. Past SIA President Tricia Gilson recalled her reaction to a mechanized sculpture by Rob Millard-Mendez titled Building a Movement (after George Lopez),

The Annual Meeting Planning Committee is excited to announce the pre-conference workshop and annual meeting will be held in Indianapolis during April 16-17, 2020. We’re looking forward to seeing you in our state’s capital as we gear up for the city’s bicentennial celebration.

So, what is Indianapolis’ official birthday? The City of Indianapolis is recognizing two dates: June 7, 1820 and January 6, 1821. On June 7, 1820, commissioners selected four sections of land to be considered the permanent site for the new state capital. On January 6, 1821, the General Assembly ratified land around the mouth of Fall Creek as our state’s permanent capital. With both of these dates in mind, the city’s festivities will officially begin during June 2020 and wrap up in January 2021.

A special thanks goes to Local Arrangements and Program Committee members: Bethany Fiechter (Chair), Sarah Allison, Rich Bernier, Jessica McKamey, Evan Miller, Alan Rowe, Elizabeth South, Kelley Brenneman (Chair), Stephen Lane, Amy Christiansen, Sean Eisele, Wesley Wilson and Katey Watson.
On August 28th, 2019, after a year and half of conversations and planning, Ball State University’s Drawings and Documents Archive finally acquired a unique and expansive collection from the architect James T. Kienle, American Institute of Architects Fellow (FAIA). What makes this collection so valuable is directly related to Kienle’s extensive and successful 40 plus years as an architect specializing in historic preservation and his connection to the longest running legacy firm in the state of Indiana: Johnson, Miller, Miller, and Yeager of Terre Haute, IN (original name of the firm was Johnson and Miller, 1910).

In 1978, Kienle went to work for Archonics Corporation in Indianapolis. The firm, Archonics, was the continuation of the legacy firm Johnson, Miller, Miller, and Yeager and was led by Ewing Miller II, FAIA, the nephew of Warren D. Miller (founder of the original firm) and Carl Bradley. As generations passed and new partners were added, the name of the firm was modified nine times until it became Archonics in 1971. Kienle was brought on as partner and Director of Preservation, playing a key role in the success of the firm. The firm later merged with Howard, Needles, Tammen & Bergendoff (HNTB) in 1985 and Kienle became the Vice President and National Director of Historic Preservation until the firm’s Indianapolis office closed in 2003. Kienle started James T. Kienle & Associates the same year, and later joined the firm Moody·Nolon in 2009. Today, Kienle is still actively consulting and engaged in community projects.

Kienle’s extensive career in architecture and preservation led him to collect over 6,000 drawings, 5,000 photographs, and extensive records that document not only his career, but successful and innovative preservation and revitalization projects that have greatly impacted the built environment and cultural heritage of Indiana. Some of Jim’s most notable works included in the collection are: Circle Theater (Indianapolis, IN), Learner Theater Expansion and Rehabilitation (Elkhart, Indiana), Morrison Opera Place (Indianapolis, IN), and the addition to the Indiana State Office Building (State Office Building South, Indianapolis, IN). It is also typical in collections such as these for the donor to have acquired related projects/plans created by other designers. With this recent donation came a set of original State House drawings, a magnificent addition to the Archive’s collection. The name of the collection is yet to be determined but will reflect the link and the connection to the Miller family legacy firm, a collection also housed in the Drawings and Documents Archive. The extensive collection is expected to take up to two years or more to process and make accessible to the public.

The Drawings and Documents Archive is currently home to 80 collections pertaining to the built environment of Indiana, and is one of the largest archives in the state that collects at a
Pike County Public Library Genealogy Department Awarded LSTA Grant

Pike County Public Library Genealogy (PCPL) Department has received a LSTA grant in the amount of $10,000 to purchase a flatbed scanner to digitize its Veterans Collection. Items in the collection includes Civil War era artifacts and record books from the Grand Army Republic (GAR), medals from veterans, World War Scrapbooks, photos, and other one-of-a kind artifacts. As part of the grant, the collection will be hosted by Indiana State Library’s Indiana Memory digital repository. This will allow greater access to the Library’s Genealogy collection, creating research opportunities for students, educators, genealogy researchers, and military history enthusiasts. PCPL Genealogy will host events locally to promote the collection at different stages of the project, such as a Digitization Event near Veteran’s Day that will encourage community members to bring in military heirloom objects, such as photos, documents, and metals. For more information, watch for updates from PCPL Facebook page!

According to Pike County Public Library Director Stephanie Rawlins, “This grant enables us to fulfill our library’s mission of preserving Pike County’s history.”

This project is supported by the Institute of Museum and Library Services under the provisions of the Library Services and Technology Act, administered by the Indiana State Library.
